A Town for Four Seasons ...

Adaminaby and its smaller 'sister' townships of Old Adaminaby and Anglers Reach are set among the rolling high plains in the New South Wales Snowy Mountains, with Kosciuszko National Park at its doorstep. With an elevation of over 1000 metres Adaminaby is truly a "town for four seasons," with mild Summers, Autumns with clear blue skies and the brilliance of the multi-coloured foliage, Winters crisp with snowy days and Spring with daffodils, apple and plum blossoms and new born lambs.

Adaminaby and Lake Eucumbene have a rich history, from the first inhabitants, the Aborigines who moved through the mountains in the summer months, to the first European settlers with their live-stock seeking sweet high country pastures, the Gold Rush at Kiandra which brought fossickers seeking a fortune and the timber getters who helped build the townships.

Adaminaby and Lake Eucumbene are also synonymous with the Snowy Mountains Scheme, with the very first stone being turned in 1949 and the creation of Australia's largest hydro electric and irrigation scheme. Claimed as the birthplace of Australia's multi-culturalism, the Snowy Hydro Scheme employed 100,000 people from many nations and saw the town of Adaminaby "moved" 9 kms to its present site, with the ensuing dislocation of families and friends.

In the present day, Adaminaby and Lake Eucumbene are localities that offer both residents and visitors alike a range of lifestyle and recreational pursuits. These include horse riding, fishing, bushwalking and snow sports, located in the spectacular Snowy Mountains environment.

Did you know...
The 'Big Trout' weighs 2.5 tonnes and is 10 metres high?

Did you know?
In total 101 homes and buildings were relocated during "The Move" from Old Adaminaby to the present day site of Adaminaby between July 1956 and November 1957.

Did you know ...

Snowy Mountains Scheme

Construction started on the Scheme on 17 October 1949 when the Governor General, Sir William McKell and the Prime Minister Ben Chifley fired the first blast at Adaminaby.

More than 100,000 people from over 30 countries worked on the Snowy Mountains Scheme between 1949 and 1974, approximately 60,000 were migrant workers who left the disruption of post World War II Europe.

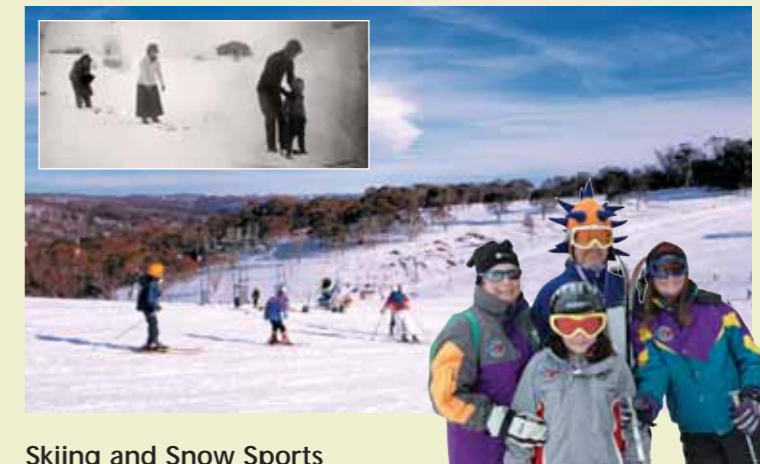

Kosciuszko National Park

Kosciuszko National Park is one Australia's largest National Parks covering more than 690,000 hectares.

Kiandra Goldfields

At its peak in 1860 the gold rush at Kiandra attracted 10,000 people who mostly lived under canvas. An amazing amount of gold was found in a very short time, in 1860 - 67,687 oz and 1861 - 16,567 oz, with an official total production of 172,000 oz. The gold was mostly alluvial and large nuggets up to 28 lb (12,678 gm) in weight were found. Gold mining in the Kiandra district continued until the 1930's.

Skiing and Snow Sports

The first snow skiing in Australia was recorded in 1860 in Kiandra when Norwegian miners raced down "Township Hill" on improvised skis called snowshoes.

Lake Eucumbene and the Eucumbene River

In the 1830s the early explorers and settlers called the river, which today is known as the Eucumbene River, the Snowy River. Subsequently it became known as the Eastern Branch of the Snowy River and was renamed the Eucumbene River in the late 1800's. A bit confusing but true!

Lake Eucumbene stores almost 9 times the volume of Sydney Harbour and at the high water mark has 250km of shoreline.

The Eucumbene lakes and rivers boast some of the best trout fishing in Australia - the largest trout ever caught was reputed to be 22lbs(10kgs)
